PROJECT MANAGEMENT

Can you answer "YES" to all these questions.....

Do all your projects finish on time?

Do all your projects finish within the original budget?

Do all your projects cause end-user delight?

Do you have competent, resourceful project managers?

Do you have sound project management methods?

Do you learn from every project that your company does?

Are the outcomes from your projects predictable?

Do your project managers engender confidence in delivery?

Is project management recognised as a skill and profession?

If the odd "NO" has crept in, you might appreciate our help!

The Insight Centre helps its clients to get ahead of the competition.....

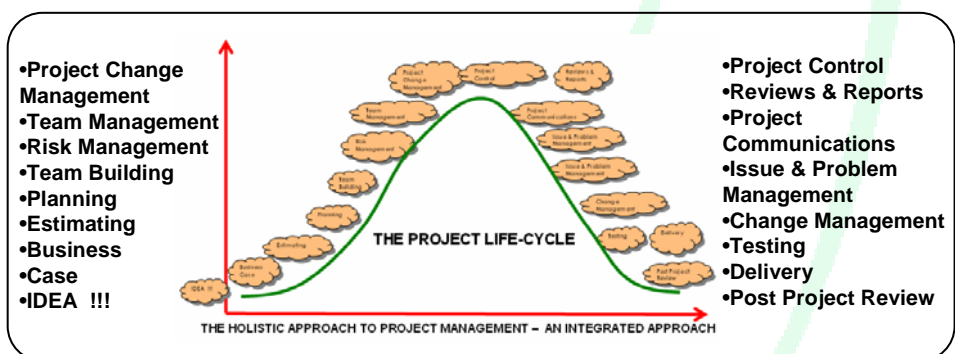

Your company, if it is to keep up with its competition, or even get ahead, relies on continual change in its goals and ambitions, products, and processes.

- Information technology is an enabler for most of this, and you need project managers to be able to rise to the challenge.
- Project Management is far more than just looking after a plan, and reporting on progress every month.
- Project Management is about competently delivery change to your company in a professional way, encompassing a number of skills and techniques.

insight #1:
Less than 5% of projects actually end in success, measured by being on time on budget and to the end users satisfaction.

insight #2:
Experience shows that in successful projects over 15% of task hours are spent on project management. Failed projects are shown to have used less hours.

insight #3:
The greatest threats to project success are chasing unattainable imposed schedules with little project management skill or experience.
